Theory has it that, if you let the one you love go, they'll always come back if it's meant to be... in most cases. In the previous installment of I Was Never Supposed to Love You, Meechi was left at the airport, pouring his heart out to everyone except the woman who needed to hear him most. On the brink of losing his sanity, Meechi can't help but wonder if he waited too late to get his act together. His stubbornness had gone on for far too long, and in the end, it had ultimately made him miss out on love, once again. Trying to hold on to what she deemed the deepest love she's ever felt, Meechi's nonchalant efforts weakened Erica's grip. She was simply tired. After holding onto something she knew was obviously too much of a hassle to maintain, she gave up. As much as she wanted her and Meechi's relationship to work, some things just had to be let go. She hadn't given up on relationships entirely, though, because with Vance in her ear, and very few options, he was looking like the perfect candidate to build something fresh with. Love isn't something you just give up freely... not the kind of love they shared. Meechi and Erica had been through the trenches together and proved everyone wrong, but life has its own special way of intervening. What people deemed would be the greatest love story ever told, was now looking like one that no one wanted to speak on unless the inevitable were to happen. In this heart gripping finale from Author BriAnn Danae, be prepared to witness love at its finest... gritty, passionate, raw, and reaching the depths of your heart that only a real love can.
