Communication Strategies in Evaluation (New Perspectives on Evaluation) Nick L. Smith

These original contributions provide fresh insights into the critical role of communication in successful programme evaluations. The authors draw on their expertise in a variety of fields, including health, criminal justice, housing, community development and education, and on their first-hand experience with alternative communication techniques. They explain how forms of communication and representation affect the nature and usefulness of evaluative findings, and describe a broad range of practical strategies for presenting findings. This innovative collection will be welcomed by evaluators as a source of pragmatic techniques for making concerned clients more receptive to their work.
